What does Madanipour mean by “Exclusion should be regarded as a socio-spatial phenomenon”
 (205)?

Social Exclusion

- “Social exclusion is understood as describing both the structures and the dynamic processes of inequality among groups in society which, over time, structure unequal access to critical resources that determine the quality of membership in society and ultimately produce and reproduce a complex of unequal outcomes”
- It is manifested through structural inequalities and unequal outcomes in access to social, economic, political and cultural resources

Rise of income inequality in Canada 'almost exclusive' to major cities: study

THE THREE CITIES WITHIN TORONTO

Income Polarization Among Toronto's Neighbourhoods, 1970-2005

BY J. DAVID HULCHANSKI, UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

GTA

Toronto is segregated by race and income. And the numbers are ugly

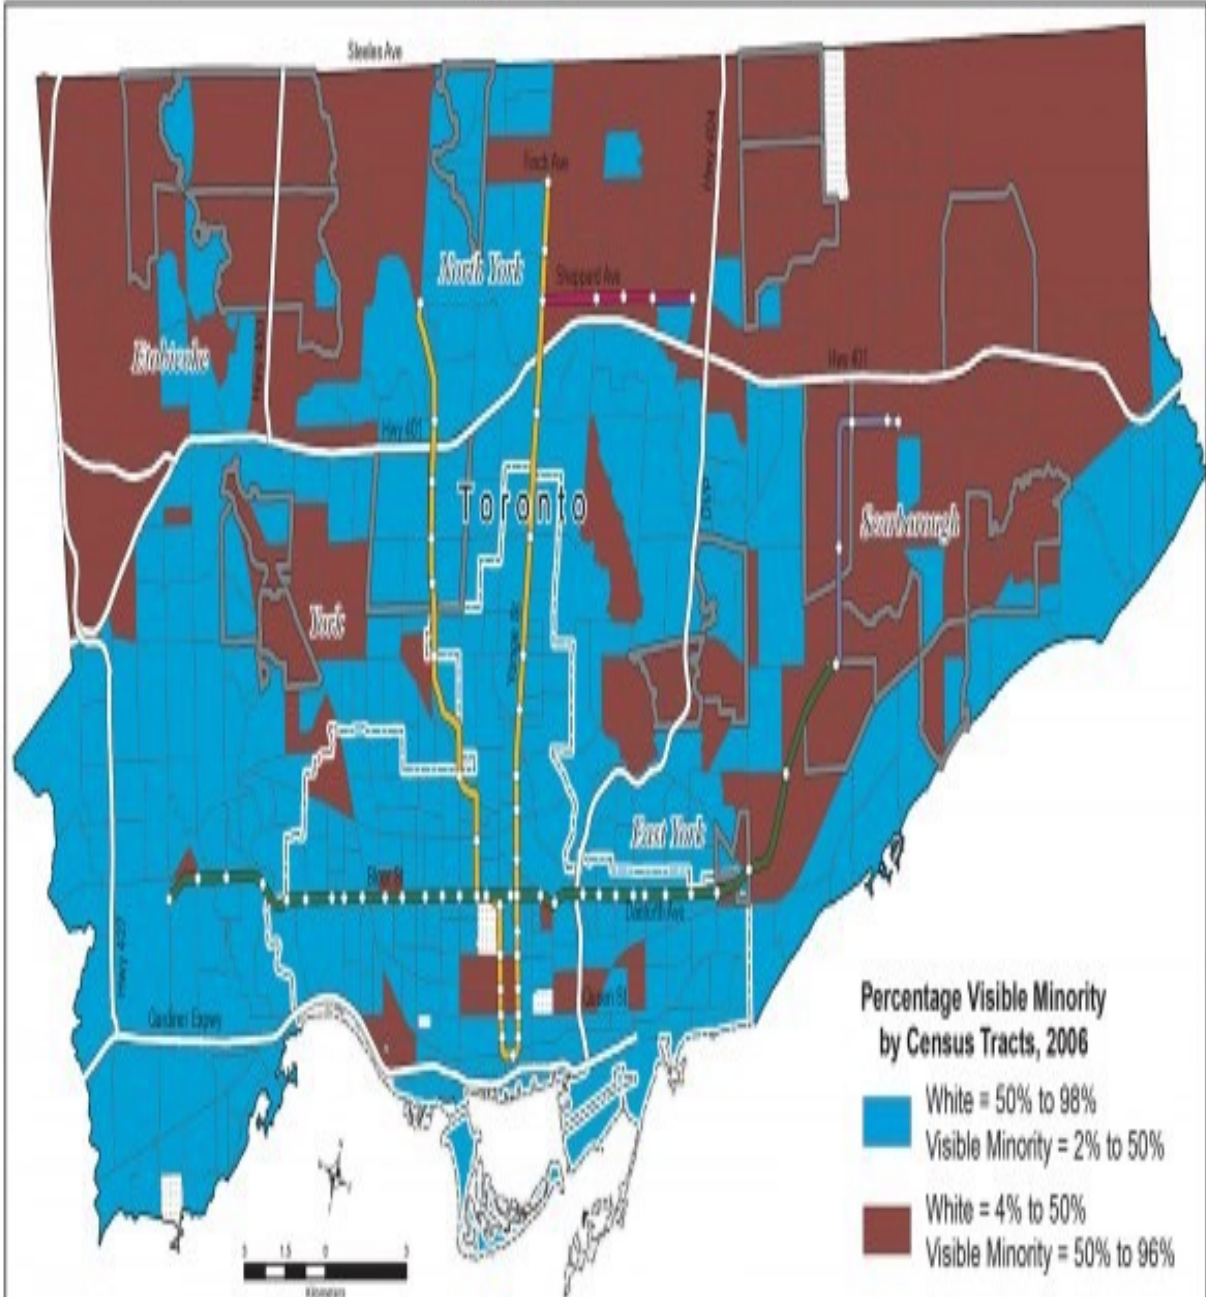

Research led by U of T's David Hulchanski shows the concentration of visible minorities in low-income neighbourhoods of the city, while white residents dominate high-income areas, in numbers far higher than their share of the population.

Percentage Visible Minority, City of Toronto, 2006

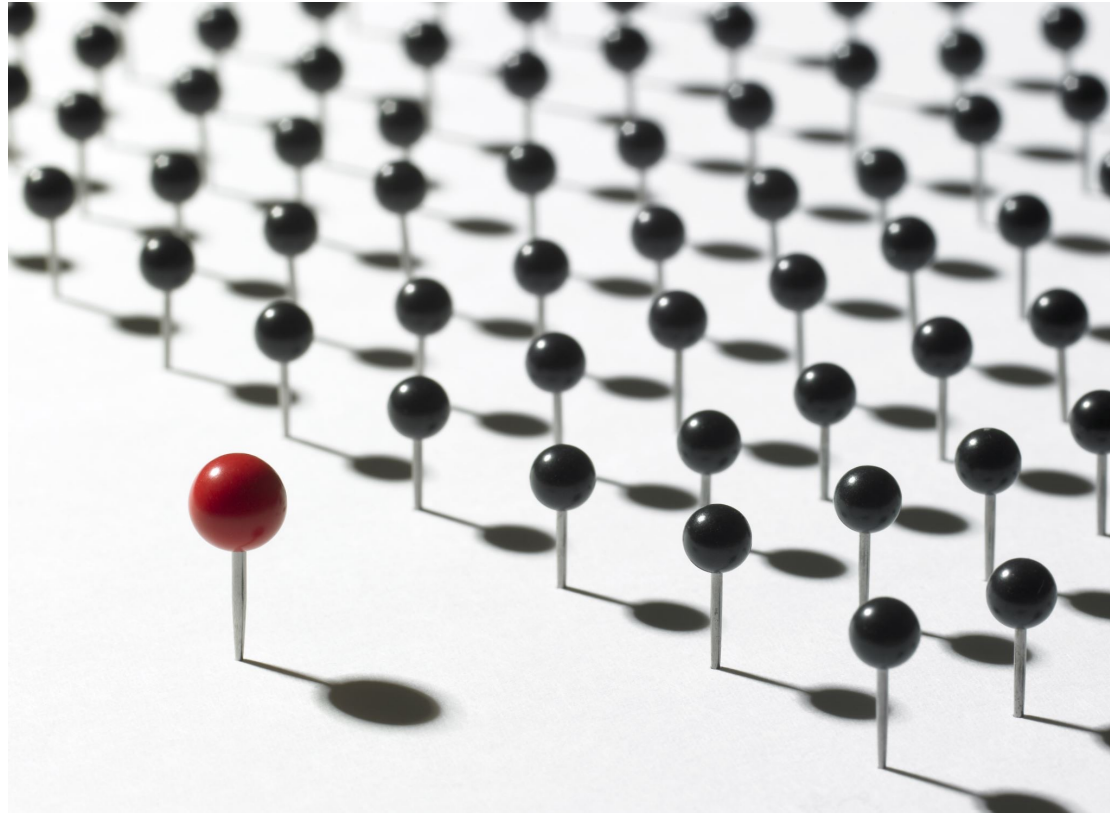

Average Individual Income, City of Toronto, 2012

- “The land and property markets have operated so as to ensure the segregation of income groups and social classes. Commodification of space has led to different patterns of access to space and hence a differential spatial organization” (Madanipour2015, 210)

3 Forms of Exclusion

1. Economic Exclusion
2. Political Exclusion
3. Socio-Cultural Exclusion

As the three broad spheres of social life in which social inclusion and exclusion are manifested

Economic Exclusion

- “In the economic arena, the main form of inclusion is access to resources, which is normally secured through employment. The main form of exclusion, therefore, is a lack of access to employment. Marginalization and long-term exclusion from the labour market lead to an absence of opportunity for production and consumption, which can in turn lead to acute forms of social exclusion” (p.206).

A. Madanipour

Political Exclusion

- “In the political arena, the main form of inclusion is to have a stake in power, to participate in decision making. In European liberal democracies, inclusion is often ensured through voting and other processes associated with it. The most obvious form of social exclusion, therefore, is lack of political representation. This may take various forms: from the under-representation of women in parliaments and governments, to the complete exclusion of immigrant groups from political decision making”.

A. Madanipour

Socio-Cultural Exclusion

“In the cultural arena, the main form of inclusion is to share a set of symbols and meanings. The most powerful of these have historically been language, religion and nationality...The main form of exclusion in the cultural arena, therefore, becomes a marginalization from these symbols, meanings, rituals and discourses. The forms of cultural exclusion vary widely, as experienced by minorities whose language, race, religion and lifestyle are different from those of the larger society”.

A. Madanipour

Barriers to Space

The space around us is a collection of open, closed or controlled places.

The physical organization of space, using elements from the natural or the built environment, has been socially and symbolically employed to put visible and strict limits on our spatial practices.

There is also a mental space, our perceptions of space. This may be regulated through codes and signs, preventing us from entering some spaces through outright warning or more subtle deterrents.

A third form of barrier to our spatial behaviour is social control, which can range from legal prohibitions on entering places to constructing formal barriers along publicly recognized borders.

What are some examples
of this?

“The most acute forms of social exclusion, however, are those that simultaneously include elements of economic, political and cultural exclusion” (p.207)

Intersectionality

- Analytical framework and methodology developed by Kimberle Crenshaw
- To identify how intersecting systems of power impact people disproportionately as a result of their race, gender, sexual orientation, class, gender identity, religion, immigration status, etc.

Governments have tried to dismantle spaces of deprivation in cities. What does this remind us of?

Social Exclusion and Space

- Slum clearance programs have been important housing management strategies to addresses this issue.
- However, governments may try to use slum clearance programs without addressing the root causes of deprivation – do we think this will address the issue here?

Social Exclusion and Space

Immigrant exclusion from the labour market leads to high levels of unemployment, underemployment and underutilization of skills.

“Social exclusion reinforces social inequality. It includes various forms of oppression, such as racism, sexism, religious oppression, anti-Semitism and homophobia that, operating independently or together, maintain the advantages, power and privileges associated with certain social groups, depriving other social groups and limiting their life chances”.

Galabuzi, Peel. Human Services & Teelucksingh

Immigration and Social Exclusion

- Immigrant populations may face issues with integrating into the new society.
- They have increasingly become subject to spatial segregation and exclusion to ethnic enclaves
- There has been a rise in low-income levels among racialized groups.
- Montreal, Winnipeg, Quebec City, Toronto, Saskatoon, Regina and Vancouver – have large concentrations of racialized group members and immigrants in neighbourhoods with a poverty rate of 40 percent and higher.

Galabuzi, Peel. Human Services & Teelucksingh

Immigration and Social Exclusion

- Social exclusion is increasingly in urban areas where racialized groups are concentrated through the emergence of racial enclaves and a growing set of racially segregated low-income neighbourhoods.
- Racialized groups continue to be overrepresented in lower paying sectors and occupations and underrepresented in higher-paying sectors and occupations.
- Social exclusion is also reflected in the educational differences experienced by immigrant and racialized students
- The experience of social exclusion can result in differential health outcomes
- The experience of social exclusion among religious minorities often leads to alienation and social distance from mainstream society.

Private Spaces

- Privacy, private property and private space are intertwined, demarcated through a variety of objects and signs: from subtle variations of colour and texture to fences and high walls.
- Those who are in are entitled to be, excluding those who are not.
- This is an exclusionary process legitimized through public discourse, through custom or law.

A. Madanipour

Public Spaces

Public space

- Space that is presumptively open to all and that all have a right to access
- Defined against private property and private property rules
- Public space increasingly influenced by private interests

Public Spaces

“Public space is maintained by public agencies in the public interest and is accessible to the public.

Access to public space, however, is subject to exclusionary processes.

Public space is guarded from intrusion by private interests, a process which is regarded as essential for the health of the society”.

A. Madanipour

The Securitization of Public Space

Rise of ‘controlled space’ - private and semi-private spaces, usually indoors or enclosed, where access and behaviour can be monitored.

Increasing surveillance of public space - cameras, private security guards, etc.

Rise of fortified architecture and design-based ‘solutions’ to insecurity – designing uses and users out of space.

About

Documenting the use of defensive urban design in the Greater Toronto Area and beyond.

Defensive urbanism, also known as hostile, unpleasant, or exclusive architecture is used to guide or restrict behaviour in urban space as a form of crime prevention, protection of property, and order maintenance.

From benches and ledges that prevent skateboarding and lying down to surveillance and security technologies that keep a watchful eye on the city, defensive urban design has become an everyday part of our urban fabric.

Types of defensive architecture/design: Seating, ledges, barriers, surfaces, surveillance and light and sound

Social Inclusion

- “Social inclusion is based on removing all barriers to individuals’ opportunities in the labour market, housing and access to social services. Within an inclusive society, free from forms of exclusion, newcomers can actualize their human and cultural capital to their full potential”(p.9).

Gentrification

- The process of change in an area resulting from an influx of wealthier people into less prosperous neighbourhoods;
- Artists and students often function as “pioneers” of gentrification;
- Rising housing prices lead to informal economic eviction of original residents;
- Changes in the dominant symbolic coding of the area lead to cultural displacement;
- Changes in dominant land-use.

Discussion

- Please check the discussion under the materials for this week on the modules page.
- Upload by the end of class - 1pm.
- Please respond in 150 – 250 words.
- ❖ Briefly explain the 3 forms of exclusion and provide one concrete/real example of each in Toronto.
